Royal Tropics : Green Papaya

Papaya (Carica papaya) is a fruit grown in tropical parts of the world such as Hawaii, the South Pacific, South America and many other places.

The papaya fruit will ripen after being picked from the tree at the mature green stage. The green papaya is known to have an abundance of a milky substance (latex), which contains two important enzymes: Papain and chymopapain. These are proteolytic enzymes, which assist proper digestion in humans by breaking down proteins into simpler and more soluble forms.

What is Papain?

Papain is a milky juice, which is found only in the green papaya fruit. Used internally, papain is very effective in the treatment of indigestion originating in the stomach or intestines. Papain transforms proteins into peptones, which are more easily absorbed into the bloodstream, thus facilitating protein assimilation and improving digestion.

As the green papaya ripens, the papain content diminishes while the amount of fructose increases. So, to ensure the highest level of enzymatic activity Royal Tropics has been using only green papaya since 1982 and has developed a special low temperature drying method to naturally retain the most papain possible. Most other papaya digestive supplements are made from the ripe fruit, rich in fructose and low in papain. It becomes necessary to add papain as an ingredient rather than use it from the original source.

Laboratory analyses of dehydrated green papaya show that it contains less than 10% moisture, about 8% protein (mainly enzymes), approximately 70% carbohydrates (pectin and fruit sugar), and 5% crude fiber. Green papaya is also rich in potassium (1950mg per 100gms), which is important to balance sodium levels and protect cells against harmful substances. Vitamin A, and anti-oxidant and vision aid, is also prevalent in the amount of 2000 I.U. per 100gms. Green papaya contains many other useful nutrients and trace elements which play an important role in human nutrition.

Royal Tropics takes great care to ensure that the consumer gets the best green papaya product possible for proper digestion.
